VOLUME XLVII.

FOURTH ANNUAL REUNION

Norway High School and Norway Liberal Institute

A large number of enthusiastic alumni gathered in the high school room Wednesday afternoon at 2.30 to participate in the 4th annual business meeting and entertainment of the Norway Liberal Institute and Norway High School Alumni Association.

The meeting was presided over by the president, Lee M. Smith, who called for reports of the committees.

Principal P. E. Hathaway gave a synopsis of what had been accomplished during the year, and a very pleasing statement that without doubt, one would be built in the coming fall and winter months.

Harriette Craig asked for a discussion of the idea of the association having a pageant next year, which resulted in the appointment of Florence Rideout as a committee of one with power to enlarge the committee and have full discretion in the matter of holding a pageant.

Next followed the election of officers as follows:

Pres.—Dr. Harry P. Jones.
 Vice Pres.—Mrs. Grace Cushman.
 Sec.—Berenice Nash.
 Treas.—Francis H. Swift.

The entertainment which followed the election of officers was one of novelty and delight. The entertainment committee were somewhat disappointed at the last moment in that Master Leo Lyons could not for some reason be present.

However, a very pleasing and altogether efficient substitute was found. The little girl singer and dancer of Portland, Muriel Montgomery, who is engaged in the same line of entertaining as Master Leo Lyons, gave the following entertainment, assisted by Master Leo Lyons.

Miss Montgomery gave her songs and dances in costumes appropriate to the song and dance.

Scott, Song and Highland Fling dance.
 Irish Song and Jig.
 Vocal Solo, A Little Bit of Heaven.
 Vocal Solo, A Little Bit of Heaven.
 Vocal Solo, A Little Bit of Heaven.

At 6.30 a supper was served at Grange Hall where the alumni grouped themselves around the festive board in classes who vied with one another in giving the loudest cheers. Some wore badges with their class numerals so that one could easily place them without asking questions. The tables were handsomely decorated with bouquets of assorted flowers. The supper of cold meats and salads was well prepared and lustily eaten by all.

After the supper, Hugh Pendexter, as toastmaster introduced the speakers with fitting remarks and each responded with a brief toast. The speakers were: Rev. Charles Tenney, graduate of the Norway Liberal Institute and now in Southbridge, Mass.; Ambrose Warren, class of 1895, now in Southbridge, Mass.; Mrs. Edith Berwick, class of 1897, now in Southbridge, Mass.; Wm. The New School Year

In anticipation of a successful school year, in taking this opportunity to call the attention of teachers and patrons to the necessity of a friendly and mutual co-operation from the start. I have given the list of assignments of teachers to the different schools to the Advertiser, which will appear in the next issue. I believe that as a whole we have never had a school year with a better prepared (in experience and training) corps of teachers than this fall. I firmly believe that every parent, who is to send children to school this fall will unite with me in urging the children to start the year correctly with the best of helpful and kindly feelings toward their teacher and that the teachers will respond to such conditions.

I desire for my teachers to be as gracious as they can and as firm as they can with their pupils. I hope this will be the banner year for the schools of Norway and Waterford. Let there be no occasion for anything but better results than ever before.

DEMAND FOR QUICKSILVER

The domestic quicksilver industry has continued active during the months of 1916 and the average price for the period has been about double the exceptionally high average for the entire year 1915.

Figures just compiled by the United States Geological Survey show that the total production of quicksilver in the United States in 1915 was 21,033 flasks of 75 pounds each, having a marketed value of $1,826,912, or an average of $86.36 per flask. Of this output 14,283 flasks, selling for $1,174,881, came from California, and the remainder almost entirely from Texas and Nevada.

The actual average sales value for the whole country exceeded the average market value in San Francisco—which was $85.80 for the year. In 1914 the domestic output was 16,548 flasks, valued at $811,680.

At the same time the production for 1915 showed an increase of over 27 per cent in quantity and 125 per cent in value.

The increased domestic demand for quicksilver in the last 18 months has been due mainly to war requirements for full armaments and drugs. Early in 1915 domestic stocks began to be drawn upon and production became more active, but as foreign embargoes left the field clear and domestic output was unable to meet the rapidly increasing call for the metal, prices continued to rise throughout the year and into the early months of 1916, the high mark of $300 a flask being passed in February. Naturally every mine and prospect became of interest.

The reaction set in, however, as the high prices drew out quicksilver supplies in Mexico and elsewhere that had been originally purchased for amalgamation of gold and silver ores, and finally as the British government permitted exports to America under certain limitations.

The average monthly domestic output of quicksilver in 1915 was $51.90 in January, 1915, to $295 in February, 1916, dropped to $219 in March, $141.60 in April, $90 in May, and about $72 in June.

The market remains steady and in general highly profitable, and as domestic prices have dropped below London quotations exports rather than imports of the metal may be expected. There is probably no great quantity of metal stored, and consumption is undoubtedly abnormally large.

Favorable markets have brought out great activity in search for new prospects and discoveries near Morton, Wash., and Beagle, Ore., in 1916, have led to some development and construction of reduction plants. A mine in the Skell Valley, Idaho, some activity is reported. Many old furnaces have been repaired or enlarged in California, Nevada and Texas.

Old workings which had been reopened, and new discoveries have been developed. Very likely the exceptionally high prices of the last few months have led to gouging and robbing many mines of their best ore, and the average tenor of the ore worked by the larger mines during the first half of 1916 may prove considerably below that of previous years. Moreover, some mines have undoubtedly passed their maximum productivity. These conditions are probably offset to some extent by the fact that more furnaces are being built and the surveys that when the consumer or the buyer of wood buys and pays for eight feet he should get eight feet for his money instead, as has happened in a number of instances, of seven feet.

What War Cannot Do.

War cannot effect the weather. The officials of the United States weather bureau are authority for the statement. They have been receiving inquiries as to what effect, if any, the constant firing of big guns and little in Europe would have upon the weather in the Old World and also in the New. The experts say that one thing which they say that the ancient idea that explosions cause rain has been exploded. And as proof of the assertion they point to the fact that the recent great explosion on Big Tom Island in New York Bay did not cause a shower or even a sprinkle of rain. And thus do the men of science shatter another popular idea.

Ignorance of the Law.

Edgar A. Russ of Dexter, the deputy sealer of weights and measures, has been on a tour of inspection in the counties of York and Oxford.

"The most trouble in those two counties of York and Oxford was the lack of inspection in all departments," said Sealer Russ, Saturday, "I found in several towns a disposition to measure dry commodities in a liquid measure. Beans, for instance, were sold almost entirely in sections off the railroad by liquid measure and that measure was invariably 16 per cent short. The beans were sold by liquid measure instead of by dry measure or by weight.

"I also found a great many milk bottles remaining unsealed and never had been presented to the local sealer to have tested," continued Mr. Russ. "There was an evident ignorance of the law instead of any attempt to evade it in every line of inspection. In a great many instances dealers in milk and cream did not take out licenses as is required. There was a lack of knowledge of pure food laws, wherein fruit and vegetables and other edibles were exposed, while they were supposed to be placed in glass cases to be protected from flies and dust.

The net weight law was violated fully as much as any of the other laws. Goods were sold in anticipation of a rush order, were placed on shelves, not marked, such as beans, sugar, cream tartar, and in some cases, tea. In many cases butter was put up in package form without being marked as to net contents. I found that people living off the railroad lines are more eager to comply with the law than those living in the cities and large towns, where inspections are made in some instances several times during the course of a year."

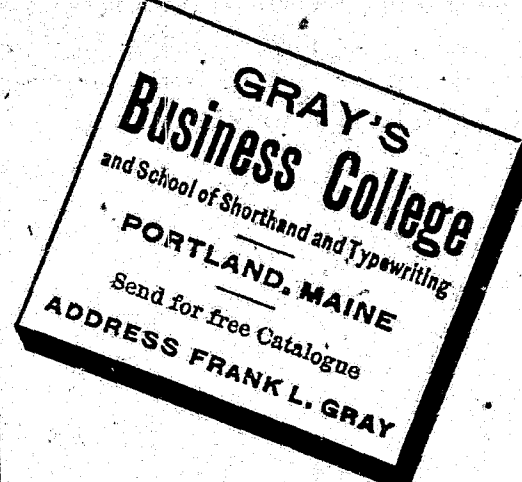

The department of sealer of weights and measures is receiving many inquiries from coopers in relation to the standard barrel law, an act to fix the standard barrel for fruits, vegetables and other dry commodities, but which did not become operative until the first day of last July. The state of Maine has a "barrel law" of its own which is nearly the same as the federal statute, and the work of enforcing the provisions of the law is in the hands of the state agricultural department, which employs a number of inspectors to look after this branch of the work.

Sealer Russ is sending circulars to local sealers and surveyors and measurers of bark, wood and lumber, calling their attention to the alleged loose way in which wood is piled for measure and cautioning them about the law. Complaints have been continually coming to the department from all sections relating to short measure received in the purchase of wood. Mr. Russ will try to impress on the sealers that when the consumer or the buyer of wood buys and pays for eight feet he should get eight feet for his money instead, as has happened in a number of instances, of seven feet.

Farm Loan Hearing in Maine, Aug. 21
A hearing of great importance to farmers, farm organizations and cities of Maine will be conducted by the newly appointed Federal Farm Loan Board in the federal building at Augusta, on Aug. 21. This hearing is to secure information to guide the board in determining the boundaries of the twelve Federal Land bank districts into which the United States is to be divided for the application of the new rural credits legislation.

The members of the Federal Farm Loan Board who will conduct the hearing are Hon. William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury; Geo. W. Norris, Farm Land Commissioner; Herbert Quick, Capt. W. S. A. Smith and C. E. Lobdell.

The board has requested farmers and farm organizations of Maine to furnish facts concerning the need of cheaper farm loans and it has asked interested cities to present claims for the locations of one of these banks. This will be the only hearing in Maine.

The new Federal Farm Loan act is designed to do for the farmer what the Federal Reserve Act is doing for the business man. Under it the government provides the machinery for assembling capital to loan to farm owners who would be farm owners, on first mortgage farm security. The loans cannot exceed 50 per cent. of the value of the land, not 20 per cent. of the value of the permanent improvements. The loans will be made at a low rate of interest, not yet determined, but not over 6 per cent. and provision is made for the borrower to pay off the loan and interest in small annual or semi-annual payments through a period of forty years or at his option. Farmers, to take advantage of the law, must associate themselves in groups of ten or more and form Farm Loan associations and then make application to one of the twelve Federal Land banks. The land will then be appraised and if it meets requirements, the loans will be made.

The new legislation is expected to prove a great boon to those sections of the country where development has been arrested because of high interest rates and it is predicted that it will have the effect of making agricultural prosperity uniform; stabilizing land values and greatly improving general farm conditions.

Thousands of requests to the U. S. treasury department for information regarding the application of the law indicate the great nation wide interest in its provisions.

Secretary McAdoo predicts that the banks will be ready for operation by January 1, or shortly thereafter.

A little camphor rubbed on a mirror after the dust has been wiped off will brighten it wonderfully.

GILBERTVILLE

A Word About Infantile Paralysis; Read It.
To the Editor of the Norway Advertiser. Dear Sir:—Since the breaking out of Infantile Paralysis in Oxford Co., everyone is naturally very anxious, and everyone is asking, "What can we do to be safe? What precautions to take," etc. As I have a brother who is Assistant State Bacteriologist in the Laboratory of the State Board of Health in Middletown, Conn., I immediately wrote him, and received the following telegram: "Avoid public places. No one safe. All ages have it. Stay home." I knew a letter would follow, and it did. As all my friends and neighbors here were so anxious to read it, and to obtain a copy, I thought perhaps many of your readers might also be glad to learn the very little as yet known regarding the dread disease, and am sending you a copy which you are at liberty to print if you desire.

Mrs. G. A. Ellis of Gilbertville, Laboratory of the State Board of Health, Middletown, Conn., August 11, 1916.

Dear Sir:—Your letter, received today, and you have doubtless heard from me since by wire. Because if you have a case of Infantile Paralysis in your town, you had better take as many precautionary measures as possible. It's a terrible disease and no matter what your physician tells you, you don't know a thing more about it really, than you do, for the doctors haven't anything to work at, not yet. Nothing definite is known. The organism causing it is so small they haven't yet been able to isolate it. The only thing you can do is take preventive measures.

It may be carried by flies, on clothing, or by animals. Probably not by flies, but don't know for sure. Keep clear of public gatherings, especially dances and moving pictures. They now know that no person is immune because of age, that is, an old person can have it as well as a baby. Several deaths around here from it among the adult classes. Don't let the kids play with young children, or with any strangers. Keep them close at home.

This is absolutely essential. Avoid trains, don't let the children be around trains at all. You never know who will have it in the morning to find himself paralyzed. It has gotten to be a terrible thing around here. Police men here guard the houses in which there are cases. The trains carry inspectors who allow no visitors to stop at towns or cities without clean bills of health from health officers, even then they are watched for days and weeks. People here are forbidden to enter certain towns in which there are cases. Armed men stand guard on cross roads and city lines and hold up automobiles, etc., and investigate thoroughly to see if any children are concealed. No news—Be careful. Ira.

Absolute Prohibition

In the province of Saskatchewan all bars were abolished some time ago. This was as far as the government then felt justified in going. Since the abolition of the bars, the government has been experimenting with the dispensary system. This has cut down the demand for liquor and correspondingly reduced the evils resulting from its use. Anti-prohibitionists have been trying to prove the contrary. Their claim is that the dispensary has resulted in an increase of drunkenness. Prohibitionists contend that the charge is utterly untrue. Nevertheless, the allegation persists. A very different result from that anticipated is in store for the liquor interests. That is, the temperance people of the province taking the anti-prohibitionists at their word, now declare that they will vote even the dispensaries out of existence in December.

Some opponents of the liquor traffic, in any form, are not so positive as others that prohibition in the provinces can be made absolute in the present circumstances. They point to recent experiments in Winnipeg which would go to show that the liquor interests succeed in introducing their wares, and in exhibiting the fruits of the traffic, despite the operation of provincial prohibition.

What the liquor interests are doing in Manitoba, however, is only a repetition of what they have done in Maine and in Kansas for years. Their effort is to bring the cause of prohibition into derision. But their work in Maine and in Kansas has spread prohibition over a great part of the Union. Their work in Manitoba will serve only to spread prohibition over the Dominion.

The liquor interests may be trusted always to do the wrong thing. They are engaged in a business that will not permit them to think or to act rightly. Every step they have taken with a view of breaking down the prohibition movement has in reality strengthened it.

They are going to force absolute prohibition, eventually upon Saskatchewan. They are going to force national prohibition upon the Dominion. In attacking the dispensary system they are paving the way for the one; in attacking provincial prohibition they are paving the way for the other.

All the liquor interests need in order to become useful and powerful promoters of continuous prohibition in North America is perfect freedom in the carrying out of their program.—Christian Science Monitor.

PASSING OF THE OLD FASHIONED CELLAR.

You remember the old-fashioned cellar, of course. You can remember the odor of fresh fruit and vegetables that thrilled you as you entered it. The pungent turnips, the savory apples, the earthy potatoes, and carrots and cabbages and parsnips and the keg of cider over in the corner. You remember these things, of course, and may regret their passing from sentimental recollection. But have you stopped to think that it was not until the passing of the old-fashioned cellar that we began complaining of the high cost of living? In your efforts to solve the problem of the daily food have you associated the present high prices with the heated basement and with the little basket of potatoes on the back porch? There is a direct connection, if you please.

Our modern houses do not have a "cold room" in the basement to take the place of the cellar. The furnace is generally in the center of the place with its heat fatal to vegetables of all kinds stored in any portion of the basement. The refrigerator is necessarily small; it is not intended for the storing of any considerable amount of food-stuffs. It is typical of modern life, the refrigerator—a thing to help us from day to day and not from season to season. We do not know why the architects have never thought of building "cool rooms" in the basement, especially since they could be so cheaply constructed.

Last fall apples could have been bought for $1.00 a barrel. Potatoes were cheap. Turnips were almost given away. All sorts of vegetables, in quantities, could have been secured reasonably. But there was no place about the house to store them. We had to buy only what we could use from day to day. Now we are paying a pretty price because of the passing of the old-fashioned cellar. And we find fault with the "times" instead of the architects!

MAKING HAY WHILE THE SUN SHINES

The law of demand and supply is used in many instances to account for high prices, but the old saying, "make hay while the sun shines," often accounts for them. In the days when a city hotel usually charged 50 cents for a dinner, the price would go to 75 cents when a convention brought a big crowd. We heard some complaining bitterly not long since because he had to pay $1.50 for a room over night instead of the customary 75 cents, or a dollar at most. In the one case there were many diners in the city, or the ingredients for them, as usual; in the other, there were many more people wanted them. In both instances the sun of business was shining and "hay" could be made. These are but two instances in many.

Beds For Outdoor Sleeping

One of the best beds for outdoor sleeping is that made out of a heaping pile of balsam boughs, all laid pointing the same way and having the shiny under sides up so as to take full advantage of the spring of the boughs.

When boughs enough have been heaped up so that one actually rests several inches off the ground the heat loss in that direction is very greatly diminished, also, the bed is a deliciously comfortable one.

Dry leaves are an Autumn substitute for balsam in regions where the latter is not to be found, but they are more difficult to collect, and it takes a larger heap to give the same effect.

Where one is reduced actually to sleeping next to the ground it is always well at least to spread a canvas or slicker under one's blankets and then use the heavy one for underneath.

This may not seem especially sound advice at sundown, but its wisdom is apt to sink in during the night.

THE WANDERING MIND HABIT.

As an all-around efficiency reducer the wandering mind habit stands well up toward the front.

This habit allows energy and power to go to waste. It acousts its victim to mental and weak activities until sustained action brings to a great effort.

Enthusiasm, faith, interest, applied attention—these are the remedies for a wandering mind. Their application requires the use of will. The first step will prove to be uphill work. New thought will be a constant tendency for the mind to revert to its old habits and thus release the energies in useless day dreaming.

Use the will to bring the mind back gently but steadily to the work in hand. Mentally free your forces to do your work. If you allow yourself to say and keep the best part of yourself from entering your work.

Free your forces, concentrate upon your work and enthusiasm will follow. Enthusiasm and interest are created by continued action provided attention accompanies the action.

A wandering mind often indicates that one lives too much in thoughts of the future and too little in the present. Do not allow your thoughts and feelings to flow out in anxious longing toward the future or useless regret for what is past. Live more fully in the now. Direct your energies into creative expression in the present.

IN BOTTOM OF FURROW.

The deep harrow run ahead of the plow prepares the bottom of the furrow for increased crop yields. It cuts up the manure and trash, refines the soil particles on the surface, and helps to secure a close connection between the bottom of the furrow and the soil.

It is the soil that is not properly prepared so that the air, heat and fermentation in the soil can be controlled so as to give the following crop a full advantage of the necessities of growth the soil is sure to be deficient.

Cover coarse trash in the bottom of the furrow and no amount of after tillage on the surface can rectify the mistake. It creates conditions unfavorable for the close connection with the soil and prevents the plant roots from penetrating the soil in search of food and moisture. If the bottom of the furrow is full of high lumps, trash and dried out clods, very much to the detriment of the crop.

In preparing for the wheat crop many farmers find that a few days work many times as possible after the crops are harvested and working tends to break down on the surface, prevents clods from drying out so that fields thus treated may be plowed easily and effectively at times when adjoining fields are too dry to be plowed. If you want to have soil conditions favorable at the bottom of the furrow, if you want to secure an abundant supply of plant food for your crops, and if you want to conserve the strength of your horses, use the deep harrow ahead of your plow.

THE HISTORY OF MEDICINE.

An exhibit pertaining to medicine and its history is in that part of the national museum building devoted to American history and industrial arts. According to its many descriptive and instructive labels, the theory of disease seems to have been studied from time immemorial and attributed to many and diverse causes.

Egyptian medicine is the earliest of which we have a written record, it dates as far back as 1550 B. C. In the prohibitive stage it was doubtless founded on superstition and practiced by magic arts, but in its earliest historic period the sick were taken to the market place where all who passed by and had suffered or seen a similar malady might lend their advice. Later more orderly systems were evolved for the treatment of the sick. Herodotus being prominent in the reforms. But Egyptian medicine vanished before the Greek system so after the admission of the Greeks into Egypt in the latter part of the 4th century B. C.

Greek medicine in its primitive period is mostly mythical, beginning with Melampus in about 1400 B. C. and ending with Hippocrates 460 B. C. The most prominent character was Aesculapius, reputed son of Apollo and Cronos, and worshipped as the god of medicine by both Greeks and Romans.

The philosophic period began with the doctrines of Hippocrates believed to be the 17th in descent from Aesculapius, and known as the father of medicine. He separated medicine from

INDIAN MONEY

There is a noticeable inclination on the part of large numbers of the American Nation to turn back to a considerable degree of interest in the matter of the money of the Indians, the early Europeans perhaps being more interested in that than in the language customs and habits of the race.

And it is curious that the Indian word for money—"wampum"—endures and a great many persons know the significance of that word who know nothing else about Indians. All Indian money was not called wampum. There being different languages among the Indians, they had different words for the medium of exchange, and it may be that the words which the Indians used, but the Indian words as they sounded to the general of the white people.

Wampum seems to have been New England Indian money, while Indian money in the South was called "roenoke" and in the parts of the Country where the Dutch were predominant this form of money was called "seawan."

Historians do not seem to have determined the question beyond the possibility of being reopened whether Indian shell money was currency in the Potomac country. It is clear that that form of Indian money called wampum was legal tender in New England for some time.

Connecticut received wampum for taxes in 1637 at the rate of four to the penny and in 1640 Massachusetts adopted the Connecticut standard of white wampum to pass current at four to the penny and blue wampum to be legal tender at the rate of five to the penny.

There are records which show that it was in current circulation with silver in parts of New York as late as 1704, and one of the reasons it passed away was that there being no restriction on making it, the white people began to manufacture it or "coin" it, and it is said that some thrifty Dutch began to turn out various forms of wampum by machinery.

Wampum made by the New England Indians was used in the Great Lake region and perhaps it was known to the Indians still farther in the West. Indians of the Pacific Coast made money from mussel shells.

Several authors, notably W. R. Weedon and C. L. Norton, have written in the years gone by learned treatises on Indian Money as a Factor in New England Civilization and The Lost Wampum Coinage. Wampum consisted of cylindrical beads made from shells. The shells of the New England clam called "quahaug" was used in the making of the more valuable wampum, or the wampum of the highest denomination. The purple spot in the clam shell was used for this form of wampum. This was called "dark wampum" or purple wampum or blue wampum. With the Indians the making of this wampum was no "get-rich-quick" scheme, because there was a good deal of quite skillful labor required in the making of the beads and each one represented about as much human labor. There was a white wampum which consisted of the same form of beads turned from the shell core of whelks or periwinkles. The shell beads were highly polished and through the cylindrical-shaped bit of shell hole was drilled lengthwise. By means of this hole the wampum was strung together either on a string made from fiber of the sinew of some animal.

The value of wampum in its relation to copper or silver coinage varied slightly in the early days of New England. There was a very early legal enactment which made dark wampum receivable at three for penny, and a "string" of wampum, which was also called a "fathom" of wampum, passed current for five shillings.—Washington Star.

New Machine for Testing Boxes

A machine for testing the strength of boxes has been devised by engineers of the Forest Service and is in use at the Forest Products Laboratory at Madison, Wisconsin. The machine is the result of experiments made to determine a fair test for all types of boxes. A series of tests in co-operation with the American Society for Testing Materials and the National Association of Box Manufacturers has been carried on during the past year to determine the strength of boxes of various woods and of different construction. Over four and a half billion feet of lumber is used for box making every year, and on this account the tests are considered important. Moreover, big losses are caused by the breakage of boxes in transit, and all parties concerned are said to be anxious to determine the best kind of box.

The machine consists of a hexagonal drum with 3 1/2 foot sides which is lined with thin steel sheets. Pieces of scantling bolted to the bottom form what are known as "hazards."

In making the tests boxes filled with cans containing water are placed in the drum, which is then rotated. For convenience in observing the results of the tests, the sides and ends of the box are numbered with large figures, and in addition other numbers are placed at special points on each side. The "hazards" cause the boxes to be carried part way around and then dropped back to the lower level of the drum. Each fall of this sort is a pretty fair imitation of the probable treatment it would receive in shipment. The boxes are watched carefully, and notes are taken on the manner in which they give way and the number of falls required to break them in pieces.

In this way, say the officials who have conducted the tests, it is possible to determine what kind of wood are best suited for boxes. The tests showed a decided need for a standard classification of box woods, and three groups have been made, based on the data which was obtained.

The tests also show the best methods of box construction. The experts say that one of the most striking things brought out was the inadequacy of the ordinary methods of nailing up boxes. The number of nails used and the way they are put in are important. One nail more to the side of a box will give it a great deal more strength than might be thought. The nails should not be driven too deep into the wood. In many cases, it is said, proper nailing will allow a reduction of the amount of lumber used without any decrease in the value of the box. Boxes with nailed ends were found to be much stronger than those without cleats.

As a result of the tests made at the Forest Products Laboratory, tentative specifications for boxes used in shipment of canned goods have been drawn up and submitted to the various parties interested, for discussion.
